2. a market order – an order with no specified price. It is filled at the best price found in the order book at the time. If the order cannot be filled at the time of its entering, it will remain in the order book for as long as the conditions necessary for its filling are met or until the order expires.

Iceberg Order

Article 190

- (1) An iceberg order is an order with two parameters related to the quantity of financial instruments, namely, their overall volume and the initial peak size. On entering the order in the trading system, the member firm may state two additional parameters: the minimum and the maximum peak size so that, when the peak size is substituted, it may be determined as a random number.
- (2) Only the peak size is available in the order book during continuous trading.
- (3) When the peak size drops to 0, it is automatically substituted to the full peak size or available amount from the overall volume, and the order is assigned a new time stamp. Where a member firm states the minimum and the maximum peak size, the new peak size value is determined as a random number between the minimum and the maximum. If neither the minimum nor the maximum peak size is stated, the peak size value on substitution is equal to the initial peak value.
- (4) In the iceberg order entry in continuous trading, not only peak size but the overall volume is taken into account, so the maximum clearing volume is executed in a single transaction. Only the peak size of the iceberg order found in the order book is included in transaction making.
- (5) Where the order is partially filled, the last unexecuted portion of peak size may be smaller than the peak size amount stated when entering the order.
- (6) Iceberg orders may not be combined with execution limits or trading limits.
- (7) On each increase in the peak size or the overall volume, the order is assigned a new time stamp.
- (8) For the duration of auctions (opening auction, intraday auction, closing auction or volatility interruption), iceberg orders are displayed with their overall volume stated. If the iceberg order is not filled in full during the auction, its peak size shall be displayed when passing to the continuous trading session.

Stop Order

Article 191

Two types of stop orders are available in the trading system for quoting in the order book after a predefined stop limit of the order is reached:

(2) In addition, the following execution limit may be used for limit orders in continuous trading:

1. Book-or-Cancel (BOC) – the order enters the order book for the purpose of its passive execution. If aggressive execution is possible, the order is cancelled without entering the order book. BOC orders are cancelled at the beginning of an auction, during which the entry of this type of order is not possible.

5.2.4 Mechanisms to Manage Volatility

5.2.4.1 Volatility Interruptions

Article 211

(1) Volatility interruptions are among the mechanisms to manage volatility which contribute to preventing sudden price fluctuations and guarding against erroneous order entry.

(2) Volatility interruptions are applied in both continuous trading and low liquidity trading.

(3) The dynamic and the static limit of price change to trigger a volatility interruption, as well as the criteria according to which these limits are set, and the duration of the volatility mechanism and extended volatility mechanism shall be specified by the Exchange in a manual and published on its website.

Article 212

(1) A volatility interruption may be triggered in the following cases:

1. on the entry in the trading system of an order which, if filled, might result in one or several transactions which would exceed a predefined limit of price change. The reference price for dynamic limits shall be the price of the last transaction in continuous trading and/or in auction;
2. on the entry in the trading system of an order which, if filled, might result in one or several transactions which would exceed a predefined static limit of price change. The reference price for static limits shall be the price of the last transaction in an auction (opening auction, intraday auction, closing auction or volatility interruption). Where there are no transactions made in an auction on a particular day, the close on the previous trading day shall be taken to be the reference price.

(2) If, on expiry of the volatility interruption, the indicative price is:

1. within the limit of extended volatility interruption, the price determination follows and transactions are made;
2. outside the limit of extended volatility interruption, extended volatility interruption follows.

Auction Volatility Interruption

Article 213

(1) If, at the end of the call phase of an auction, the indicative price at which transactions would be made in that auction exceeds the dynamic and/or static limit of price change, the volatility interruption shall be triggered automatically.

(2) The volatility interruption results in an extended call phase, during which members may enter new orders, modify or cancel existing orders. The call phase with a variable ending ends on expiry of the extension time.

(3) Where, at the end of the volatility interruption, the indicative transaction price still lies outside dynamic and/or static limits but within extended volatility Interruption limits, prices shall be determined and transactions made.

(4) The volatility interruption functioning described in paragraphs 1 and 3 of this article shall apply to low liquidity trading, opening, intraday and closing auction.

Continuous Trading Volatility Interruption

Article 214

(1) During continuous trading, transactions are made for as long as the transaction price does not exceed the dynamic and/or the static limit of price change, triggering a volatility interruption.

(2) Volatility interruption prompts a change in the trading procedure by interrupting continuous trading, after which an auction begins.

(3) The auction consist of a call phase and price determination.

(4) Once a predefined call phase time expires, it is followed by a variable ending.

(5) Where, at the end of the volatility interruption, the indicative transaction price still lies outside dynamic and/or static limits but within extended volatility Interruption limits, prices shall be determined and transactions made.

5.2.4.2 Extended Volatility Interruption

Article 215

5.2.6 Price Determination

5.2.6.1 Auction Price Determination

Article 217

(1) Auction price shall be determined according to the order book status at the end of the call phase by selecting the price at which the maximum volume may be closed at the minimum surplus.

(2) If there is more than one price at which the maximum volume may be closed with equal surplus, the surplus volume shall also be taken into account:

1. if there is a bid surplus side for all prices, the auction price shall be equal to the highest price;
2. if there is an ask surplus side for all prices, the auction price shall be equal to the lowest price.

(3) If the auction price cannot be determined based on the surplus, the reference price shall be taken as an additional criterion. Such situation occurs where:

1. there is a demand surplus at one set of prices and a supply surplus at another set of prices;
2. there is no surplus at any price.

(4) In the case referred to in paragraph 3(1) of this article, the highest price with a demand surplus and the lowest price with a supply surplus shall be further considered. In both cases, the auction price shall be determined using the reference price as follows:

1. if the reference price is greater than or equal to the highest price, the auction price shall be equal to the highest price;
2. if the reference price is smaller than or equal to the lowest price, the auction price shall be equal to the lowest price;
3. if the reference price lies between the highest and the lowest price, the auction price shall be equal to the reference price.

(5) If the order book contains only market orders, transactions shall be concluded at the reference price.

(6) If the order book is not crossed and there can be no transactions, the auction price cannot be determined either. In that case, the best buy and/or sell orders shall be displayed, if available.

(7) The price determination method described in paragraphs 1 through 6 of this article shall apply to the auction procedure, the opening, intraday and closing auction, and volatility interruption.

5.2.6.2 Continuous Trading Price Determination

Article 218

(1) Each newly entered market order or limit order shall be compared with pre-entered orders on the other side of the order book to see if orders can be filled and one or several transactions made.

(2) The orders shall be executed according to the priority determined by the order price and time stamp.

(3) The order sequence gives priority of execution to buy orders quoted at a higher price and to sell orders quoted at a lower price.

(4) If there are several orders quoted at the same price, the orders with an earlier time stamp shall have priority.

(5) Depending on the order book status, orders may be filled in full, partially, in one or several steps, or they cannot be filled at all, which may result in the conclusion of one or several transactions. Orders which are not filled or which are filled partially shall remain in the order book, ranked according to the priority determined by the order price and time stamp.

(6) In addition to the order price and time stamp, the priority in order execution shall also be determined according to the following rules:

1. If a market order or a limit order enters the order book with only limit orders on the other side, the price shall be determined according to the highest bid order or the lowest sell order.
2. If a market order or a limit order enters the order book with only market orders on the other side, the order shall be filled at the reference price and possible volume.
3. (a) If a market order enters the order book with both market and limit orders on the other side; or or
(b) if a limit order enters the order book with only market orders on the other side; or
(c) if a limit order enters the order book with both market and limit orders on the other side, then the order entered shall be filled against a market order, with the priority of order execution depending on the order price and time stamp; if market orders appear on the buy side of the order book, transactions shall be made at the price which is equal to or higher than the reference price (the highest possible order price); if market orders appear on the sell side of the order book, transactions shall be made at the price which is lower than or equal to the reference price (the lowest possible order price).

(7) Any market orders entered in the order book which have not yet been filled must be filled immediately in the following transaction, where possible. In doing so, the following principle shall apply in continuous trading:

1. orders shall be filled at the reference price, where it does not undermine the order price and time stamp priority;
2. If orders cannot be filled at the reference price, their execution according to the priority determined by the price and time stamp shall be ensured by determining the price above/below the reference price (for buy/sell market orders which have not been filled), or else the price shall be determined by the order book price or according to the price of the order entered.

 1. where there is a crossed order book within the market maker's price range, but it does not result in partial order execution; or
 2. where there is a crossed order book at the market maker's bid or ask prices, but it does not result in partial order execution.
- (4) A transition from the pre-call phase to the call phase shall occur:
